races are going on as though there among her owners because Skipper William P. Burton asserted his rights and sailed out the race making it a legal victory under the rules.

It was recalled that when Shamrock broke her topmast in her race with Columbia in 1899, Columbia smilled out the course and won the race and later the series. Sir Thomas and his advisers said Columhia had won perfectly properly. There were two other withdrawals from races in which Americans won. The first was when Lord Dunraven, after showing bad feeling by accusing the Americans of sharp practice and after being disqualified for colliding with the defender, lost his temper and ordered his yacht out of the race after having her enter by rossing the line.

The other was when Sir Thomas Lipton in the deciding race against him seventeen years ago found that the Shamrock III., badly beaten, had missed the finish mark and had sailed two miles beyond it toward Rockaway in the fog. He ordered her out of the race saying it was a hardship and a mere technical formality to send her back to cross the line when she had been fairly and thoroughly

The sailors on the broken and defeated Resolute, which came into the anchorage under tow with her crippled sall hanging across her how and over her deck like a broken wing, were in even higher spirits than were the sailqrs of the winner,

Soldiers and coast guard men along the Government pler cheered and applauded as the Resolute was towed into piace by the tug James Daughterty. The blond Scandinavian-descended Americans on the stesolute lifted up their voices and cheered in reply again and again. They danced on the decks. They shouted defiance to the Shamrock and the Shamrock's men later when the winner came in past them to her anchorage, a mile or more away.

They could hardly wait to get the word to strip and go overboard into the water like a lot of school boys in a swimming hole when dismissed from their duties. A few of them came ashore at Fort Hancock for supplies left for them at the pier. The coast guard men "kidded" them merrily.

"Hey, you pups," they said, "if you haven't got any throat halllards that will hold, let us get you some. We have got some that will hold better than a shoestring."

"G'wan," shouted the Resolute men, "we have got all the hallfards we need. All we need is a new gaff. Did you see what the yank did to our guff? Pulled the bolt clean out of it, and just completely put it on the bum. Got to have a new one and we've got is and it will be in place tomorrow." "What's going to break next?"

DEAD MAN IN AUTO PROBABLY SLAIN IN FAMILY FEUD

Grazeano's Brother-in-Law Also Met His Doom at Hands of Assassin,

The story of the murder of another member of his family throws a sidelight on the slaying early to-day of Alfredo Grafiano, who was called from a table in a cafe at No. 85 Kenmare Street, where he was dining with Miss Kitty Flynn, cabaret singer, and shot to death with a double-barrelled 'shotgun which had been concealed in a guitar case. Grafiano was hurried to Bellevue Hospital in a taxicab called by Miss Flynn, where the physicians pronounced him dead. His slayer es-a dozen large yachts and excursion beats could be seen trailing streamers of smoke back to the horizon, looking for all the world like an advancing battle fleet. On each side of these hung a fringe of small craft of every kind and description. One of those lines was proudly led by the good ship John F. Hylan, the Folice Department's new boat. The further from Sea Gate the Victoria got the more ahips showed up on all sides, ranging in size from a little sail boat barely fifteen feet long over-all to the Origaba, which took the correspondents abroad to the Feace Conference. On the bridge of the Victoria Sir Thomas remarked that he had never seen such a crowd at the start of any of the previous international races. Overhead four or five planes swooped low in defiance of the Navy's orders that no plane should come below an altitude of 1,000 feet.

Soon after the start of the race most of the people on Sir Thomas's bont left the bridge and other points of vantage to flock to the stern of the promenade deck, where a buffet lunch was being served. Every one was about 120 this morning in the restaurant. I had gone there with a girl named 'Buster.' There were four of us sitting at the table, the other man being De Frima. We had been there about twenty minutes when Griffaano got up.

"I said to him, Evidently you don't like my company.'

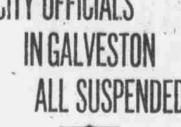

"He said, Yes, I do, but I'm going out to get some fresh air.' A moment later I heard shots and ran out. Grafiano was lying on the sidewalk, bleeding.
